A despondent liberal recently assailed me, exclaiming, "It's disgusting to see people still trying to blame the democrats for everything, yet say nothing about the republicans! The political system is broken and BOTH parties have sold out to Cooperations!"

Letter case is important in political discussion, because Republicans are not really republicans, and Democrats are definitely not democrats.

My father was a union rep. He devoutly believed that the Republicans represented the rich, and that the Democrats represented everyone else. But the evidence he based his support of Democrats on was merely the Democrats' very reluctant (elections occasional) empty promises of the smallest of crumbs possible, whenever workers sought the whole loaves they deserved. The Democrat misled unions rejected the democratic (socialist) organizations that had made them strong, and they embraced the autocratic corporate party Democrats, who now won't even provide crumbs for the hard working people who still support them... while banksters get bonuses.

It is the corporate party's Democrats that have **FALSELY** taken credit for every hard gain won by people in social justice struggles. Through a combination of a lies-based false history and thuggery threats, millions of well intentioned people seeking good policies from government have been regularly lured and forced &mdash; like cattle to slaughter &mdash; into voting for undeserving Democrats, who provide what Republicans want... after which the Republicans want more than the Democrats have given them... so the Democrats then give the Republicans more.

There are no "BOTH parties"!

There is one corporate (R) & (D) party, divided into two factions enabling it to fool near all the people all the time. The difference between Republicans and Democrats is mainly in which fools each always fools.

What distinguishes Democrats is their truly remarkable ability to keep people believing their lies whenever their Republican partners can't.

All corporate (R) & (D) party voters are faith-based voters... but the votes Democrats get are from voters who have misplaced their faith.
